Conclusion

Scott Stephenson: Thank you for joining me on this tour today. I hope you have some additional time during your visit so you can go back and dive a little deeper into some of the stories that you found particularly interesting. Remember, your admissions ticket is good for two days, and you can use any of the glass doors that we've passed that open between the Galleries in the atrium to kind of shortcut your way back to areas that you found particularly interesting. Now, throughout the Museum, both in and outside of the Galleries, you'll encounter our Museum Education staff who are very highly trained and eager to continue the conversation to answer your questions and to tell you about all the exciting programming that goes on in the Museum. You can also check out our website and follow us on social media to keep track of the exciting things that go on every day, every week here at the Museum.

Now don't forget, you're in Philadelphia, the headquarters of the American Revolution. You're just steps from places like Independence Hall, Carpenters' Hall, the Betsy Ross House, the Liberty Bell, the National Constitution Center, places that will further enrich your experience of Philadelphia. And while we're talking about headquarters, do not miss Washington's War Tent. This is a dramatic 12-minute presentation of the crown jewel of the Museum of the American Revolution's collection, the sleeping and office tent that shelter General George Washington through the Revolutionary War. That's located just around the corner from where you're standing here on the second floor of the Museum. If you're interested in suggestions for any other places to visit, please feel free to ask any of our Museum staff.
